

College is an experience and a rollercoaster of emotion, learning, excitement and drama and this play is just that. Minnesota State University will be putting on the new play Really Really at KCATF Region 5. Really Really is a play about college students from the generation me. The play focuses on the ramifications of a one night party. The play asks you what happens when you cross college kids and parties, you get a string of lies and disillusion building up from the very beginning that will make you judge the characters actions and leave you questioning yourself at the end of it all.

The show explores a deep connection between friends and drives home truths that happen daily. It explores the common wealth a college foundation and human beings. How a conflict between someone's words weighted against someone else's words. Craig Ellingson the Director of Theater at Minnesota has more emphasis on musicals but says he puts on one play every school year. He also mentioned that working with a small cast in plays like this really benefits the small ensemble and helps keep them focused.

When you go see Really Really prepare to leave the theater asking many questions about the characters and yourself. Watch conflicts that threaten the livelihoods of college students who only care about their own interests. Prepare to see characters that will truly disturb you emotionally but yet will strike you as someone very familiar and extremely close to home. This show will make you question the generation being portrayed but most of all make you wonder at how real and raw everything in the show actually is. It's a humorous but also disturbing reality that will be performed on stage.

Minnesota hopes to drive home a very exciting and thematic college play. Come enjoy a college rager with a day of repercussions. Come enjoy this production at the Normandale theatre Tuesday 7:30 and Wednesday 10:00 and 2:00.
